Ilocanos still want Marcos finally buried in 'Libingan'

By Cristina Arzadon
Inquirer Northern Luzon

LAOAG CITY—Even the Ilocanos (province-mates) of the late dictator Ferdinand Marcos are displeased over his burial in his home province even if he is given military honors.

Vice President Jejomar Binay had recommended to President Aquino that Marcos should be given full military honors but he should be buried in his home province of Ilocos Norte and not in the Libingan ng mga Bayani (Heroes' Cemetery) in Metro Manila.

Sarrat Mayor Edito Balintona and Marcos, who was born in Sarrat, deserved a place at the Libingan ng mga Bayani, being a former president and soldier.

"It is historical hypocrisy if we deny him that honor because he deserves it," he said.

Balintona said it was also a hypocrisy that people judge Marcos because of the wrongdoing that he committed against the country.

No one's perfect

"Who among us is perfect… or who did nothing wrong? Marcos may have violated other people's rights but he did a lot for the nation," he said.

But should the burial site be finally settled in Ilocos Norte, Balintona said Sarrat should be made as Marcos' final resting place.

Batac City Mayor Jeffrey Nalupta has pitching for his city, the Marcoses' official residence, to be the burial place.

Batac is in the province's second district, where the Marcoses launched their political careers. Marcos' father, Mariano, represented the district in the House of Representatives. The same seat was occupied by Marcos and his children, Ferdinand Jr. and Imee. His widow, Imelda, is the incumbent representative.

Glass coffin

The strongman's remains have been sealed in a glass case in a temperature-controlled mausoleum in the family compound in Batac since 1993. The remains were flown from Hawaii, where he lived in exile from 1986 until he died in 1989.

A report had claimed that Imelda Marcos sealed an agreement with then President Fidel Ramos for the latter to allow the return of the remains on the condition that the widow signs a waiver for a hero's burial and the body to be flown directly to Ilocos Norte.

Mrs. Marcos has yet to confirm whether such agreement took place or that she executed a waiver over a hero's burial for the strongman.

But Balintona, a lawyer and close Marcos ally, said the waiver would not hold water because a person's burial could not be made a subject to a waiver by anyone.

"The burial should be decided by facts and history. Besides, the supposed waiver should not be taken against Representative Marcos. Ultimately, it is beside the issue [whether Marcos] deserved a hero's burial," he said.

He said he was aware that Mrs. Marcos was considering a final interment for her husband in Sarrat after Binay's recommendation but said she has yet to discuss with him any funeral arrangements.

Mrs. Marcos, who visited Sarrat a day after Binay issued the recommendation, said she was leaving her husband's burial to "divine plan."

Balintona said he may lobby with the family to make Sarrat Marcos' permanent resting place. "The presence of Marcos' body [in Sarrat] will spell huge tourism and economic boosts," he said.

REAL PEOPLE. REAL PLANS.

No stars. No celebrities. No socialites or media personalities.

Just ordinary people with extraordinary stories.

These are the stories of Philam Life's policyholders and plan beneficiaries.

Simple, personal, true-to-life stories that show that the best way to protect your future or make your dream come true is to get the right advice and have the right plan.

BUTI NA LANG MAY PLANO AKO.

Meet Connie Dizon, a Philam Life policyholder who, along with her brother, ran a successful business, took good care of her mother and was generally happy with her life.

Like she said, "Life was beautiful."

Until the day she discovered she had cancer.

Nothing ever really prepares you for cancer. For Connie, her first concern wasn't her own welfare but that of her family's. The last thing she wanted was for her battle with cancer to be a burden to her loved ones.

Buti na lang.

Fortunately for Connie, she had a Philam Life plan that covered her medical expenses. Undergoing treatment for cancer was hard enough. She could certainly do with one less thing to worry about.

Today Connie is proud to call herself a cancer survivor.

She is also proud to call herself a Philam Life policyholder.

Life can never prepare you for a curveball like cancer. But planning ahead played a big role in Connie being able to say "buti na lang."

WALA NA SI DADDY, PERO PARANG NANDITO PA RIN SIYA.

An OFW, who happened to be a seaman, was telling his daughters how, in the open sea, it was ordinary for him to see waves as big as houses and buildings.

One of his daughters, Deorie, asked, "Do you ever feel afraid, Dad?"

He answered, "Yes. But my love for you, your little sister Ginger and your Mommy is far bigger than the fear."

"It's as big as my dreams for you."

Deorie's dad was the perfect husband, father and provider. Little did Deorie know that she would lose him to lung cancer on his next trip home.

Despite his passing, however, his dreams live on.

Her dad had made sure to plan ahead for their financial security.

Thanks to Annielle Rodriguez, a Philam Life financial planner, he was able to plan for his daughters' education. He invested in Scholar Gold, an educational plan from Philam Life.

Today Deorie is an honor student while her sister Ginger is doing just as well in school. No matter what happens, their schooling is well-provided for.

PLAN FOR THE FUTURE WITH THE INDUSTRY LEADER.

Deorie is one of 40,000 students who benefited from Philam Life's education pay-outs.

Connie is just one of thousands of policyholders who was able to rely on Philam Life's insurance plans. Connie's policy is Excelife Gold with Lifeline rider that provides cash for hospital and medical expenses upon diagnosis of a critical illness like cancer.

Connie and Deorie's stories are just some of the many real-life stories of how the country's number one life insurer was able to help its policyholders and beneficiaries.

By consistently delivering on its commitments to its policyholders, Philam Life continues to be one of the most trusted names in insurance. Philam Life has given over P4 Billion in education benefits since 2004 and has provided P8.17 Billion in total insurance benefit payments in 2010 alone.

Philam Life offers solutions for life protection needs – Vanguard and Guardian; for education - Bright Future Plus; and for health - Health 100, Cancer Life Shield or Lifeline, that provides cash for hospital or medical expenses upon diagnosis of cancer, stroke, heart attack and 30 other critical illnesses.

For OFWs, Philam Life offers the BalikBayani financial planning program and Pasalubong Packages that provide financial solutions for protection, savings, education, investment, health and retirement needs.

Philam Life is launching a new multimedia campaign, including TV commercials megged by one of the country's hottest up-and-coming directors, Paolo Villaluna of Storyline fame. The campaign is also supported by print ads, billboards and web materials that capture the stories of Connie and Deorie.

More than just "selling" insurance, Philam Life aims to enlighten more Filipinos on the value of planning ahead. The company's ultimate goal is to help more Filipinos achieve their dreams with the right advice and the right plan.

If you too are a Philam Life policyholder or beneficiary and somehow your plan was able to protect your future or help your dreams come true, tell us your story.

Who knows, you too could serve as the next inspiration for others to plan their lives ahead too?

BSP seen raising bank reserve requirement anew

Credit Suisse says inflation pressure remains

By Michelle V. Remo

THE BANGKO Sentral ng Pilipinas may be poised to raise the reserve requirement for banks by another percentage point this year as the excess cash in the system remains significant even with the initial increase implemented last week.

This was according to Credit Suisse, which projected that the BSP might find it prudent to increase the reserve requirement some more to combat remaining inflationary pressures arising from excess liquidity in the economy.

Following last week's one-percentage-point adjustment, the reserve requirement now stands at 20 percent. This means a bank has to keep with the BSP P20 for every P100 of deposits it generates. A higher reserve requirement reduces the amount of money that banks may use for lending to consumers and businesses.

The increase in the reserve requirement is meant to temper inflation as officials said the excess cash in the system was substantially pushing demand and, in the process, prices of goods and services.

Latest government data showed that inflation, which measures the annual rate of increase in consumer prices, averaged 4.5 percent in May and 4.3 percent in the first five months of this year. The figures were an acceleration from the 3.8 percent recorded in 2010.

Prior to last week's increase in the reserve requirement, the last time the BSP changed the rate was in 2009 when it was reduced to 19 percent from 21 percent. The cut was meant to inject more money into the economy to help avoid a recession given the global crisis during that time.

Credit Suisse said the BSP was likely to bring back the reserve requirement to 21 percent this year.

The investment bank said that the move of the BSP to raise the reserve requirement last week was anticipated, citing hints made earlier by central bank officials and the apparent need for liquidity mopping measures. Credit Suisse opined that the increase in the reserve requirement was actually delayed.

"What we found surprising, however, is why the BSP has taken so long to mop up some of the excess liquidity," the investment bank said.

Besides raising the reserve requirement, the BSP has also increased its key policy rates by a total of 50 basis points so far this year.

The BSP's policy rates now stand at 4.5 percent and 6.5 percent for overnight borrowing and lending, respectively, following the rate increases earlier this year. Overnight borrowing is the amount paid by the BSP for overnight deposits placed by banks, while overnight lending is the amount charged by the BSP for overnight loans it extends to banks.

These policy rates influence the interest rates charged by banks on their own clients, thus affecting demand for loans and appetite for savings. Loans and savings, in turn, affect how prices behave.

Credit Suisse said that on top of the likely additional increase in the reserve requirement, another 50-basis-point raise in the policy rates was expected to be implemented by the BSP before the year ends.

SALVATORE MANN'S SUEDE SHOES SAVVY AT SM

Purple oxford suede shoes

Medium gray sneakers suede shoes

With its rugged finish, suede shoes have always been associated with everything cool and hip. The history of brown suede shoes dates back to one of the first visits of the Prince of Wales to America, while blue suede shoes have, of course, achieved iconic status thanks to the popular rock and roll song.

Made from the underside of animal skin, suede is softer, thinner, and more pliable than leather made from the upper side, making it a popular choice for formal to casual, from day to evening wear, as can be seen from the Salvatore Mann collection at SM. Ranging from casual loafers and sneakers to businesslike lace-up oxfords, to boots, the collection is never out of style.

How to care for your suede shoes? The old adage, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure definitely applies. Treating your suede or nubuck shoes with a protective spray or finish will help repel water and prevent stains. But when stains do occur, only use products specifically designed for the material.

For heavy stains, use a suede cleaning block - also called a suede eraser - that will crumble as you rub them across the surface of the footwear, and is great for removing even deeply embedded dirt. After cleaning, the nap of your suede can be restored by using a suede brush. The bristles of suede brushes are usually made of brass, and often you can find the cleaning block and the brush in one kit.

Salvatore Mann's suede shoes collection is available at the Men's Shoes Section of the SM Department Store.

MOTHER and Child" dinner by Jorg Kuisch plate charger on a red placemat makes a dramatic impact. Vintage cutlery from Japan is juxtaposed. The centerpiece is foliage and cactus orchids.

ate nature's bounty all culled from Ner's garden—orchids in little pots, vines and twigs that trail along the table, casually strewn shells to emphasize a seafood meal.

For vegetarians, she combines vegetables and flowers as the centerpiece. "I use squash because it's attractive and functional. After the dinner, you can cook them," she says.

Touch of luxury

Displaying fresh vegetables that were used as ingredients in the course also creates a decor statement.

"If pinakbet is served, I present the bitter gourd and eggplant, then some flowers. Or I put the veggies on a silver platter to give a touch of luxury so they don't look as if they came from the market. I also like to use woven baskets or trays for an organic touch. When my son's friends come over, they don't care for fancy decor. They just want their meals. But they will enjoy the candles that come in different sizes and shapes. Their purpose is to ward off mosquitoes."

On coordinating tables with a guest list, she personalizes them. She acknowledges collectors of Mapagayay Ilio or Botcab by arraying them on the open baluo with their favorite paintings.

For mestizos, she photocopies old prints and some paintings and uses them as placemats. Book lovers would enjoy a tablecloth made from tapestries of "Pearl of the Orient," whose cover is a painting of an oyster shell from Barcelona.

During Christmas, Ner spruces up the table with holiday plates and linens for a festive air, punctuated by fresh poinsettias and candles.

"They come in different colors now and they're not so expensive."

Ner says decorating need not be expensive. She seldom buys flowers since she picks them from her garden. Colorful marigolds, fragrant ylang-ylang and campanula and dendrobiums are complemented by tropical foliage.

"I'm thrifty. I don't want to spend on flowers that wilt easily. I use low ordinary pieces such as songs of India, songs of Java, bamboo, ferns—I put them in a nice container made of glass, ceramics, silver and wood or from dainty flowers in a bowl. I can combine the arrangements with sculptures by Daniel dela Cruz, Ann Pamintuan or Ramon Orlina," she says.

Dining sets

Through the years, Ner has been collecting dining sets and cutlery for eight to 12 guests.

"I have a stainless steel set which I bought in Japan while I was studying there in 1966. My helpers keep them well. I haven't lost a piece. After every party, they count the items. There are special pouches for putting them. There's a pouch for the knife, the spoon, etc. I have a passion for organizing. Training my helpers has made life easy for me and enabled me to be creative. They've been with me for years. I have a Dansk set from Denmark and heirloom sterling silver pieces from my parents. They're kept with Silver Island commission but I'm amazed that Sylvia Montilla uses fine silver for ordinary fare."

Ner eschews polyester tablecloths. She favors cotton, linen and ramie because they absorb moisture. She also loves the textures and patterns of local woven fabrics from Ilocos, Ifugao and Mindanao.

Ultimately, Ner believes that simple table decorating tips add that extra congeniality and refinement to everyday meals.

RULE of color: When complementary colors are placed against each other, they are made to look brighter such as the breakfast setting of blue floral plates and table cloth with yellow napkins. With yellow flowers on blue bottles enlivens the breakfast table.

THE coolness of the green plates and placemats emphasizes the refreshing taste and sight of the sangket ginger and fresh mango juices, which are also adorned with greens.

LANAI entertaining: The buffet spread is Italian with eggplant tapenade, red bell pepper, ginger in olive oil, home-made tomato sauce, grilled peppers, imported sausages, breads, assorted grissini, pecorino, camembert, romano cheeses and Italian panettone.

THE centerpiece is an artistic rendering of fruits in a glass, laden with fruits, squashes and African flowers and tiny candles.

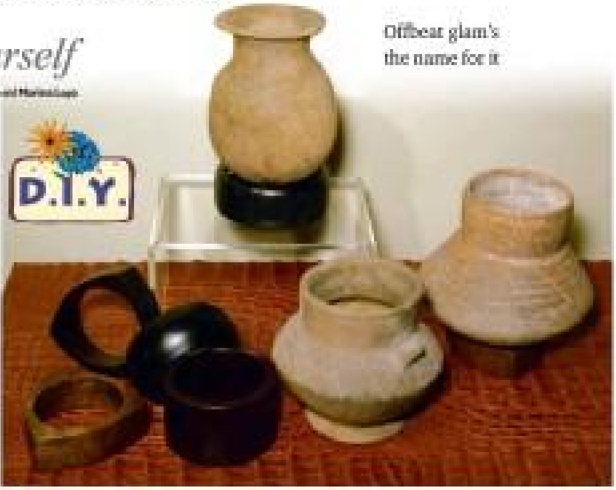

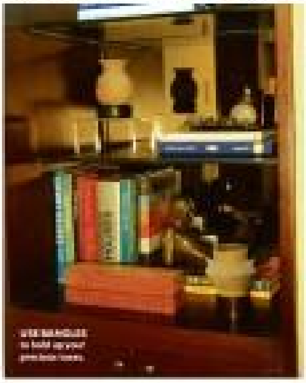

FRESH slices of orange and kamote are served on a leaf and adorned with an edible flower.
